JOHN DUNN

John Dunn was a British fur trader for the Hudson Bay Company. He writes: Having been articled to the Hudsons Bay Company, I left my fathers home in London, in their ship, the Ganymede, for their settlements on the Pacific. It is needless for me to give any account of our outward voyage (though I met with some strange adventures) to the Sandwich Islandsat which we stopped for a short time ; and thence to the Columbia river. Having arrived at the western head-quarters of the CompanyFort Vancouver; on the northern shore of the river, ninety miles from its mouthI was placed in the fort, in the situation of assistant store-keeper. After remaining in the fort nearly a year, I was commissioned to proceed northward, in the companys ships, on trading and exploring expeditions; threading, in our various courses, the whole of the vast labyrinth of gulphs, sounds, straits, bays, and inlets, that interlace the whole of the Pacific shore, for many hundred miles inland, and along many degrees of latitude. Here I was in the character of trader and interpreter; and assisted at the erection of several forts, in various parts of the country, never before occupied. I then returned to the Columbia ; and was placed for some time, in charge of Fort George, near the mouth of the rivernow an outpost attached to Vancouverthe famous Astoria, so much vaunted of by the Americans, as their settlement; from which they once threatened, to use Washington Irvings phrase, to sweep the Pacific; and spread their internal trade through the Canadas, and the Polar Circles; and banish the Britishers as traders, if not as residents, from the whole northern continenta boastful threat, which they have signally failed to execute. They made, however, every endeavour to realise this most ardent wish of their hearts, but have been completely foiled. In place of being the expellers, they are themselves, in a great measure, the expelled the result of their own irregular mode of dealing, and cupidity; which have roused against them the distrust, indignation, and hatred of the natives. Having spent eight years in the Company's service, I was induced, by my father, who had other projects in store for me, to return home.
