

Choosing Sides

Righteous doesn't always mean right. Just ask brothers Lemuel and Ethan Buckley as they navigate adolescence in the tiny, God-fearing town of Cherry, North Carolina where local pastimes include judgement, threats of damnation and herb gardens. It's the beginning of senior year and seventeen-year-old Lemuel is holding tight to his virginity, as well as his parents' approval, while sixteen-year-old Ethan is feeling the wrath of Dad following that little incident involving a public bathroom and a naked girl. Lemuel is not a fundie Bible-thumper, though; he's just a normal kid who just wants to be a good person. But as adulthood draws closer, Lem realizes that strength of character is less about cold showers and keeping your hands above the covers and more about examining the boundaries of one's faith. His new crush has introduced him to Buddhism, and for the first time Lem is forming his own ideas about spirituality even though it means hiding Pema Chodron books under his mattress like it's porn. And when Lem sees his best friend struggling with his newly found sexuality in their devoutly judgmental town, he decides to put his reputation as the good son on the line and decide for himself the difference between right and wrong.
