

Electronic Portfolios: Personal information, Personal Development and Personal Values (Chandos Series)

This book explains the motivations for building and using portfolio tools, and clarifies the principles and practice of using and developing them for assessment, recording personal information, self-presentation, personal and professional development, and for subtler and deeper aims of encouraging a reflective approach to learning, practice and life, developing personal identity, and ethical development towards moral agency. The book also offers a stimulating future vision to orient those with a longer-term perspective on the directions in which portfolio tools and related technology are advancing. The only book with a coherent future vision of the e-portfolio field grounded in current practice. Brings together principles, technologies and practical guidance for users and practitioners
