

Mixed Feelings: The Complex Lives of Mixed-Race Britons

Britain has the highest levels of mixed race relationships in the developed world. Nearly half of all Caribbean children in this country have one white parent. In many areas there are more mixed race children in care than any other group. Issues of race lie at the heart of New Britain and in this title the author gives an analysis of mixed race issues, supplying a history before going on to analyze dilemmas such as guilt, and the absence of social policy. Her book aims to reflect the complex lives of this growing and increasingly visible population.
